Message

Our message distills the basic facts of what we do, answering these questions:

- Who is our radical buyer?
- What is our category?
- What is our essential value?
- Who (or what) is our competition?
- And what is our choice factor?

Our message is flexible: We use it to create uniquely tailored messaging based on core brand components. It also gives us the elements we need to authentically and consistently represent the Mobile Health brand.

Our message framework consists of two components:

- ① Message Variables
- ② Drive Variables

Message Variables

The message variables are the foundational elements of what we'll say and how we'll position Mobile Health to the market.

Here are the definitions of the five message variables:

Radical Buyer

A variable for the shared attitudes, behaviors, and beliefs of buyers who “get” our company, who resonate with our persona and vision, and to whom we don't need to proselytize to engage

Category

Our market category; the words or phrase someone would search for via Google to find something like us

Essential Value

The single most important outcome for our radical buyer; how we change their lives in our defined market category

Competition

The alternatives our radical buyer might consider instead of or in addition to our solution (this may be a competitor, a category of competitors, or even a different way of doing things)

Choice Factor

When push comes to shove, our radical buyer's single most significant reason they will choose us over an alternative — this is the exact opposite of our competition

Radical Buyer:

De-riskers

Among brokers, consultants, and HR leaders trying to eliminate the business risks of healthcare costs, health plan member engagement, and failed technology implementations, Mobile Health attracts those looking to avoid a mess to clean up or prevent customer churn.

While many of these buyers are not tech-savvy, they want to be stewards of a cost-effective Digital Health and Wellbeing strategy that improves employee engagement, health, and productivity.

Category:

Digital Health and Well-being

Tech brands have been running away from wellness for a decade, but this is at the core of what we do. We need to own this. However, with wellbeing coming into the spotlight as part of the Employee Experience, this is the “progressive” approach that our brokers and consultants will want.

Pairing this with emergency category labels such as “Health Navigation” and “Digital Health,” we can be inclusive of digital health and wellbeing to align our offerings to fit within the market.

Essential Value:

Healthcare Cost Control Through Member Engagement

Carriers and employers have been pursuing the vision of an employee benefits portal for the past 20 years. The goal was to reduce employer healthcare costs as employees make better decisions. What was the vision?

- Access employee benefits information (coverages, SPD, claims information)
- Drive healthcare consumerism (decision tools, calculators, etc.)
- Make better personal health decisions (wellness content, available resources tracking tools, coaching, etc.)
- Removing the “clutter,” allowing employees to focus on what matters to them

Today, we have the technology and integration to defragment siloed programs and yield higher member engagement, actionable insights to influence members, and better analytics for employers. Mobile Health is changing lives in our category with healthcare cost control through member engagement.

Competition:

Complicated Approaches

This space is too crowded, but let's be real — when we are competing against the likes of Virgin Pulse and Castlight, we are going against companies cobbled together via acquisitions. These Franken-platforms require data heroics on the back end to yield insights and codebases that make integrations difficult.

As a result, it's a time-consuming, complicated, expensive, and risky way for our buyers to customize solutions.

Choice Factor:

Simplicity

Mobile Health's platform was not cobbled together; it was built in-house, from the ground up to be highly configurable. Our low-code approach makes it easier for our customers to get exactly what they want, and our years of experience tell that story.

This configurability makes it faster, cheaper, and less risky for customers to integrate other benefits solutions. No matter which carrier, we play well with them. Our rewards engine and user experience simply want to make it easy to engage members. This simplicity is why our radical buyer will choose Mobile Health every time.

Drive

Our Drive consists of the character traits that define who Mobile Health is as a company — the force that propels us as an organization. Our Drive is immutable, alive, and part of our DNA. It's not visionary or aspirational. When we present our message framework through the lens of our Drive, the result is a compelling and authentic position that goes beyond mere features and benefits.

After all, if we don't know what Mobile Health stands for, who we are, or what we want to accomplish in this world, neither will our audience.

Our Drive consists of two components:

- ① Drive Variables
- ② Brand Attributes

Our Drive Variables

These Drive variables map directly to our company's archetype: the guardian. We are driven by compassion, generosity, and a desire to serve.

Here are the definitions of the Drive variables:

Archetype

The role our brand plays in the buyer's mind; the personality that best embodies who we are and why we're here

Envisioned Legacy

Given enough time, resources, and good fortune, the impact our brand will have on the market — even on the world; our NASA moon mission

Shared Obsession

The central pursuit or belief that permeates everything we do; the reason we get out of bed in the morning, regardless of what the day holds

Archetype:

Guardian

The guardian archetype protects and serves others. Guardians demonstrate compassion, generosity, and a desire to help those in need.

Guardian brands play the vital role of providing structure to the world — the essential goods, services, and solutions that allow us to chase our dreams.

Shared Obsession:

Helping people live better, longer,
healthier lives

This is the reason we get out of bed in the morning. Everyone desires to see future generations grow and prosper.

We want to help people live better, longer, and healthier lives to make that a reality.

Envisioned Legacy:

Mobile
Health made it easier for employees to build healthy cultures

On average, Americans spend a third of their lives at work. To truly have a healthy life, it is critical for employees to have a healthy work culture.

When our grandchildren's careers are thriving and they maintain healthy wellbeing, the market will recognize that Mobile Health made it easier for their employer to build this healthy culture.

Our Brand Attributes

While the message components define “what we say,” the brand attributes support our Drive and define “how we say it.” They differentiate us from other employee networking software solutions.

Our brand attributes are:

Solution-oriented

Altruistic

Dedicated

Brand Story

Our Brand Story

Our brand story filters our message variables through our Drive to empathize with and activate our radical buyers, as well as appeal to other prospects. It provides the core for all of Mobile Health's market-facing communications.

You invest heavily in healthcare benefits for your people, but many of those benefits can be complicated to understand, don't always work together, and go underused. As a result, your people struggle on their wellbeing journeys, and you struggle with rising healthcare costs. Everybody's at risk.

Mobile Health makes it simple to reduce those risks. We can quickly and easily curate all of your healthcare technology and programs to come together and create a seamless wellbeing journey for your employees. You'll see health and wellbeing program engagement soar as employees adopt better, healthier behaviors. Plus, you get data-driven insights to control costs better. Everybody wins.

Mobile Health — making a healthy culture simple.

Applied Messages

Applied Messages

With our brand story as the foundation, we've prepared a set of messages to apply consistently in our market-facing communications.

Boilerplate

Almost identical to our brand story, the boilerplate is a stand-alone description that can be used at the end of press releases, white papers, and other articles and assets.

About Mobile Health

Companies invest heavily in healthcare benefits for their people, but many of those benefits can be complicated to understand, don't always work together, or go underused. As a result, people struggle on their wellbeing journeys, and companies struggle with rising healthcare costs. Everybody's at risk.

Mobile Health makes it simple to reduce those risks. We can quickly and easily curate healthcare technology and programs to come together and create a seamless wellbeing journey for employees. Health and wellbeing program engagement will soar as employees adopt better, healthier behaviors. Plus, companies will get data-driven insights to control costs better. Everybody wins.

Voice and Tone

Voice and Tone

Our Drive variables (especially our brand archetype) and brand attributes provide the foundation for the development of our voice and tone.

As the guardian, we speak with compassion and understanding. Our voice gives us the ability to empathize with our radical buyers and show them how we can help them with their problems. With our voice and tone, caring and reassurance is the path to our power.

Our Voice

Driven by our archetype and brand attributes, our voice is the real core of our personality, based on Mobile Health as a guardian brand. Our voice should be evident in all of our content, regardless of the type of asset or the target audience. Our voice should reflect our brand attributes (solution-oriented, altruistic, and dedicated) with these elements:

- Honest
- Compassionate
- Generous

Our Tone

Our tone stems from a place of determination and hope, combined with courage and a need to improve the world our customers live in.

We adapt our tone depending on the specific audience and medium. For example, a business case for brokers, consultants, and HR leaders might use a more serious and technical approach, while a social media post for end users might use a more conversational tone.

Voice Activation

When applying our brand archetype, consider some of the following examples of what our brand communicates and what it does not.

We are ...	But that doesn't mean we are ...
Honest	Brash, abrasive, or curt
Compassionate	Pedantic, arrogant, or elitist
Generous	Aggressive, loud, or impatient

The Logo

The Logo

This is our primary logo and should be used in all print and digital applications.

The logo allows for immediate brand recognition and should be found in all of our use cases — including outbound communication, marketing material, and sales decks.

The primary logo is made up of two parts; the logo type and the logo mark. The logo mark may be used independently, but never the logo type.

Minimum size

When using the logo, do not scale less than the minimum approved size. The logo should appear no smaller than 120 pixels wide for digital applications and 1.5 inches wide for print applications.

The logo mark, when used independently, should appear no smaller than 20 pixels wide for digital applications and .25 inches wide for print applications.

Clear Space and Minimum Size

When the primary logo appears in a composition, make sure it doesn't feel cramped or claustrophobic.

Do not place the logo too close to the edge or too close to any other graphic elements. Respect the clear space shown here, which is based on the letter height of the logotype.

When using the primary logo, do not scale less than the minimum approved size.

Logo Color Usage

Appropriate contrast is crucial to maintain maximum legibility. The examples on the right and the guidelines below should be followed:

- Always use the primary logo on light backgrounds like white or light grays
- Only the all-white version of the logo may be used on darker backgrounds

Logo Do Nots

It is important that the logo appears in a consistent manner. Maintaining the proper form, color, and legibility is crucial.

The logo should not be modified outside of the approved usage, and this set of rules should be followed when the logo is used.

Do not alter the logo colors.

Do not rotate the logo.

Do not add drop shadows or other effects.

Do not stretch, warp, or alter the proportions of the logo.

Do not disproportionately scale the logo.

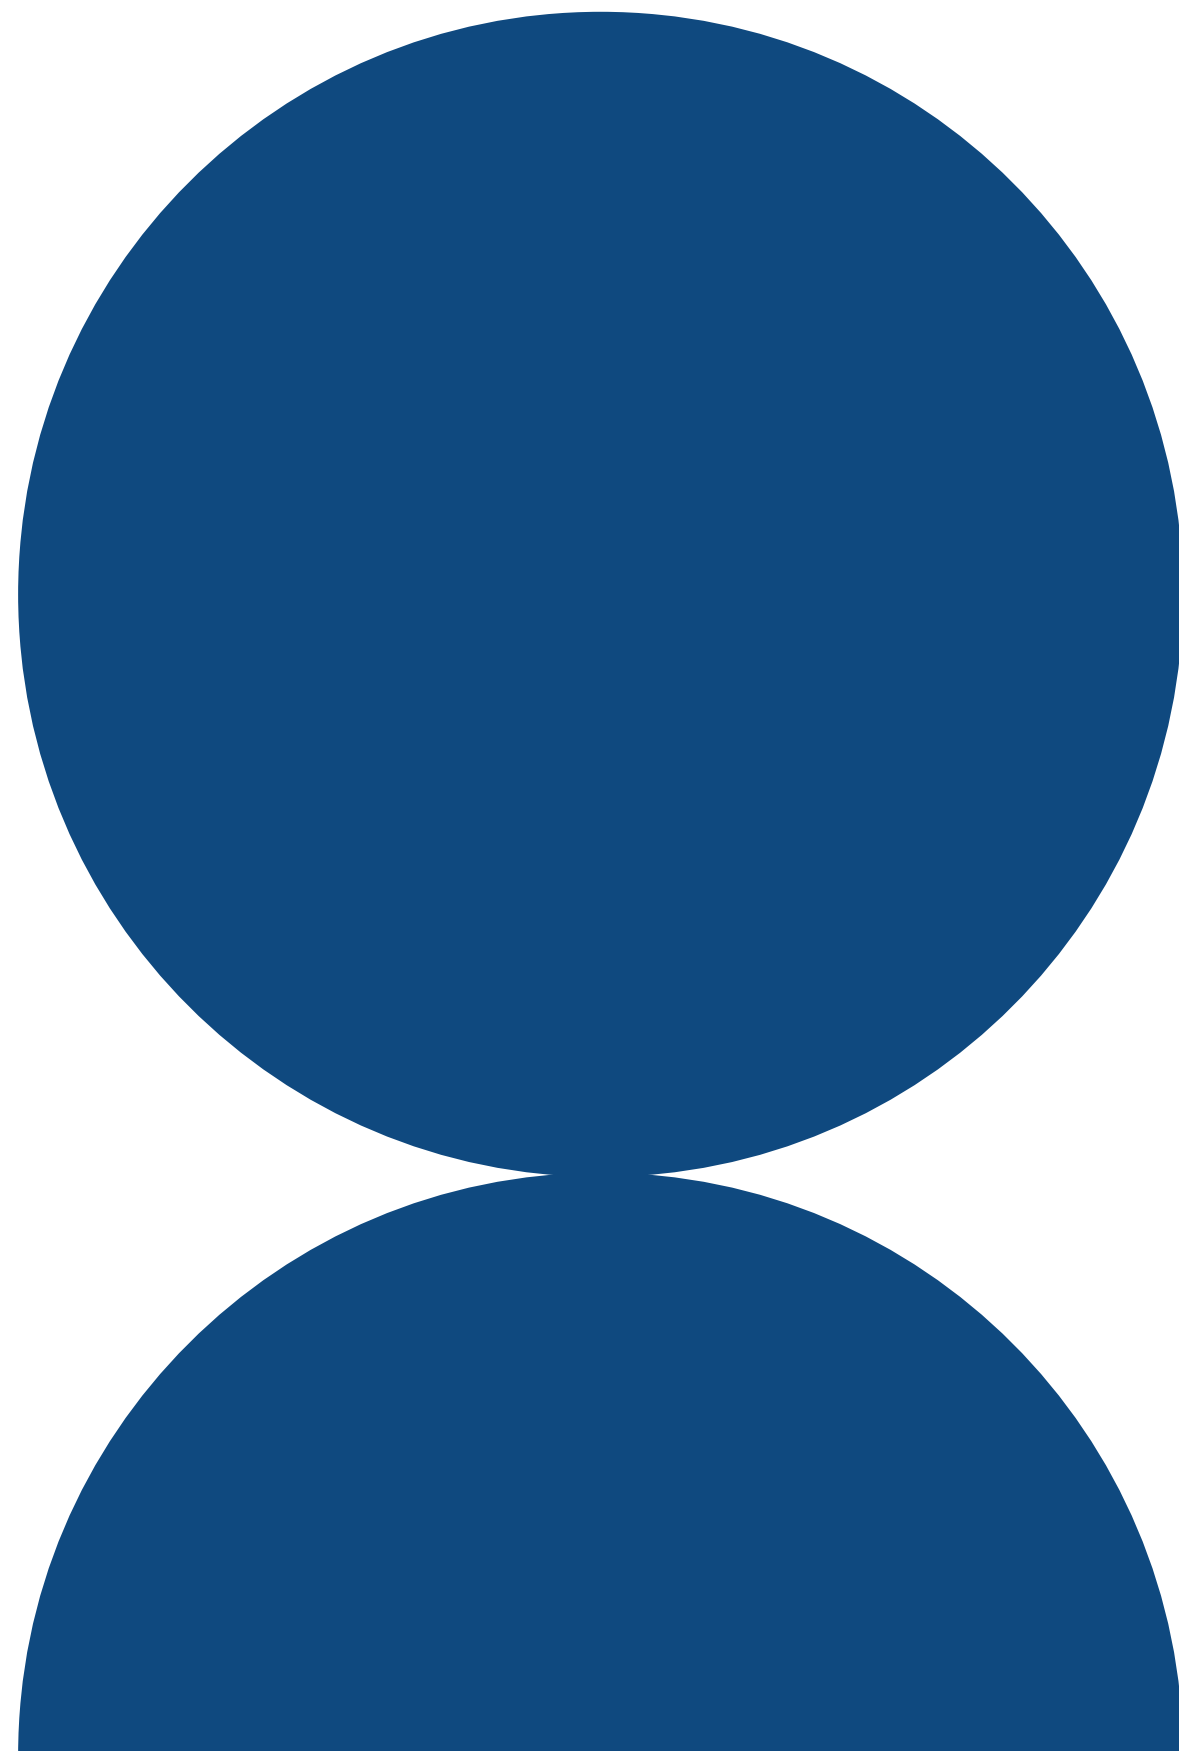

Do not place the logo on distracting backgrounds.

Color

Primary Brand Color

Brand Blue is our primary color and should be used for any static or one-off brand-focused executions (such as corporate collateral, app icons, and press materials).

Our Brand Blue denotes a sense of trust, credibility, and dedication. It aligns to our guardian archetype and serves as the core of our color palette.

Secondary Palette

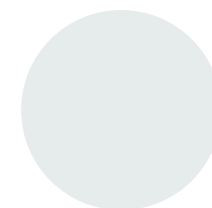

Our secondary color palette is inspired by the elements of life: earth, wind, water, and fire. Our brighter colors bring energy and life to the brand. While our neutrals keep things grounded with cooler, soothing grays.

When using the secondary palette:

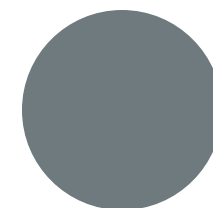

- Aqua Blue, Spring Green, and Lava Orange should be used for headlines, graphic elements, and CTAs.
- Cloud, Silver, and Night Sky may be used for backgrounds, within illustration, or to support graphic elements.
- Slate and Charcoal are predominantly used for text. They can be used with illustration but should not be used as primary background colors.

Tertiary Palette

Our tertiary palette provides an assortment of colors to support our secondary palette and primary Brand Blue.

When using the tertiary palette:

- The tertiary palette may be used to make layouts feel more vibrant and harmonious.
- The tertiary palette may be used as an accent color or spot element.
- The tertiary palette may be used as background colors in marketing material but should never overtake our primary Brand Blue or secondary palette.

Typography

Brand Typeface

Our brand has one primary typeface, Raleway. Raleway is an elegant sans-serif typeface family. Made up of geometric forms with an old-style flare, this legible typeface has unique character while maintaining a professional quality,

For consistency of use, follow the hierarchy and weights represented here.

An Important Note About Numbers

We use the alternate lining style numbers offered within the Raleway typeface. Raleway’s standard old-style numbers are not allowed and should be replaced with alternates whenever possible. Notice the difference in alignment below:

Visual Language

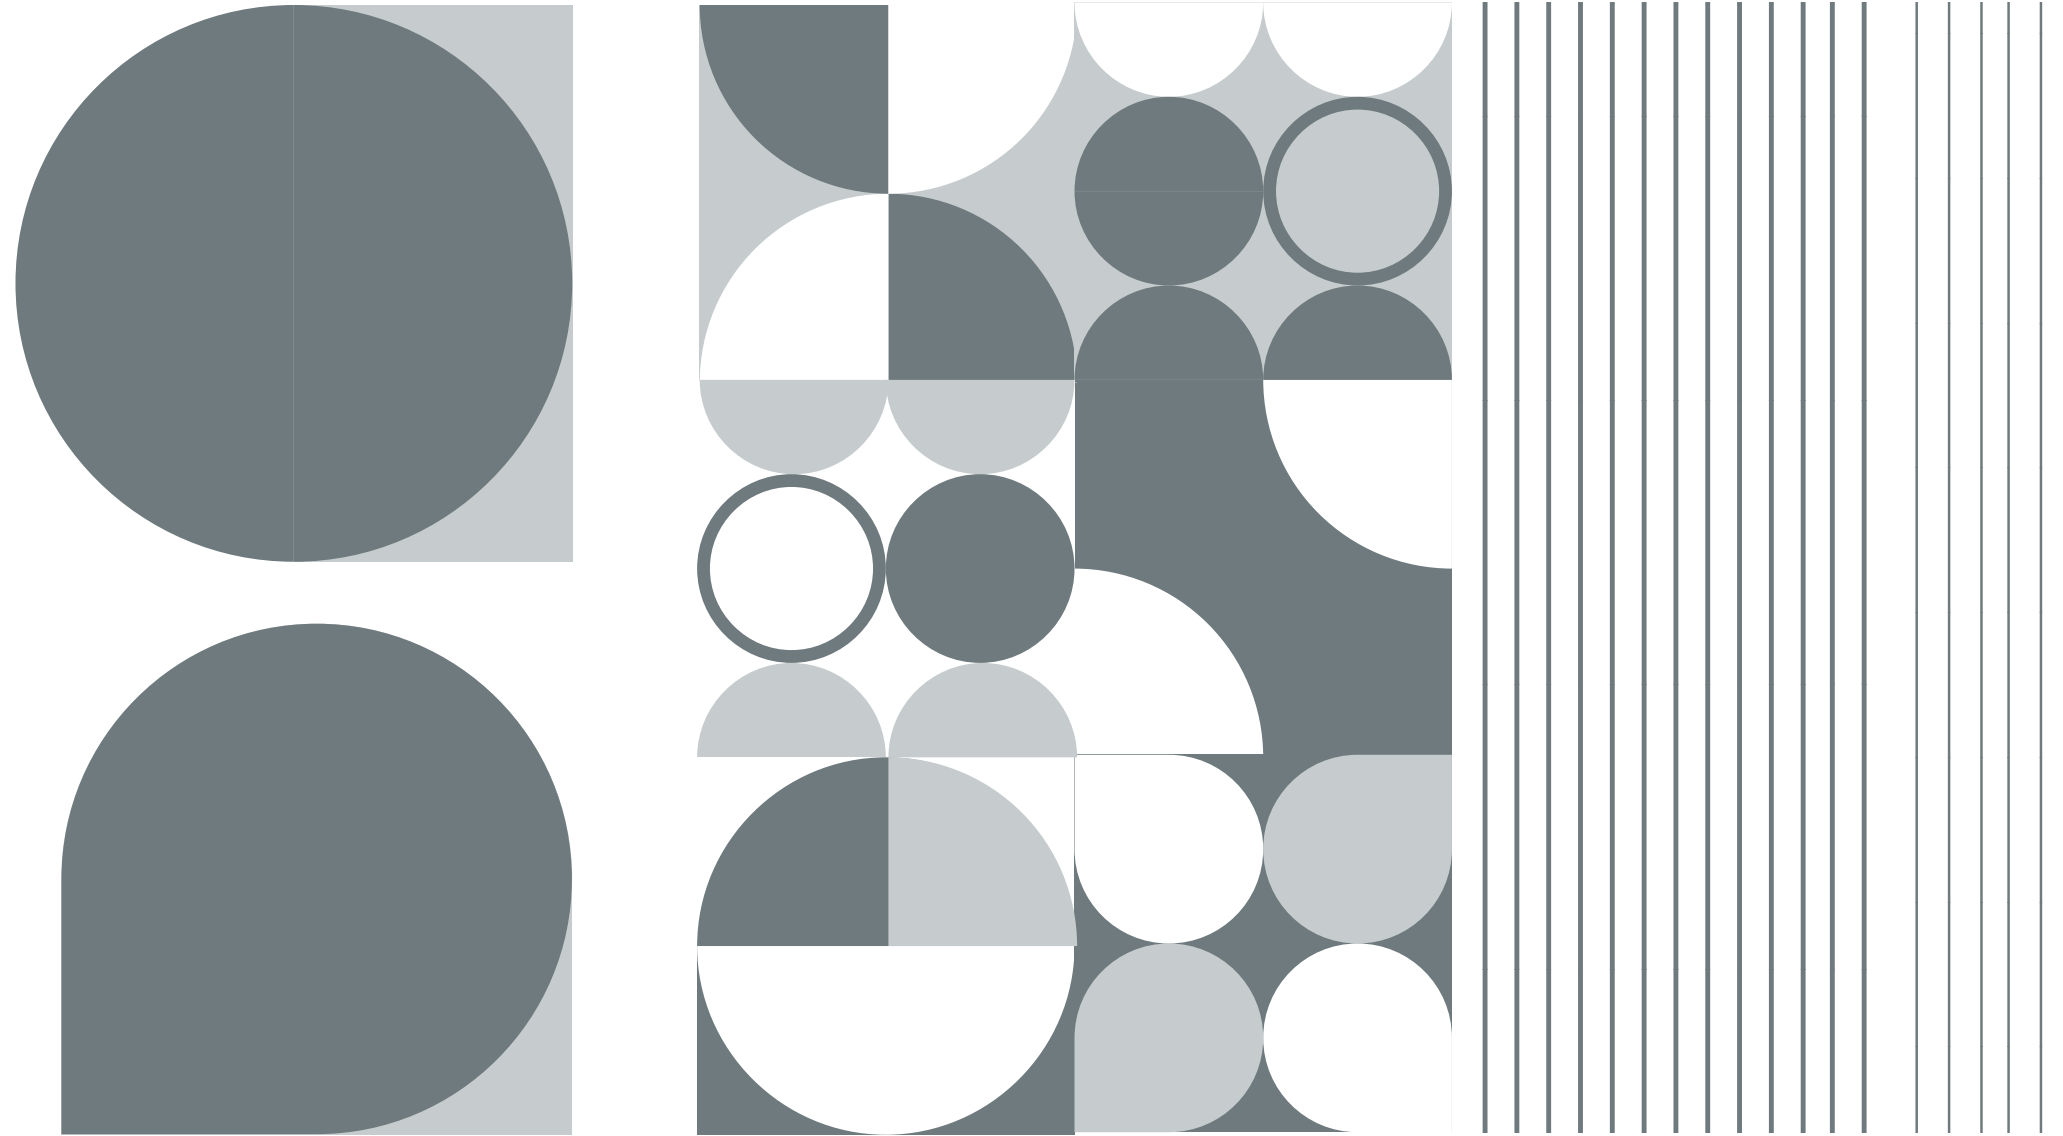

Graphic Elements

We make creating healthy cultures simple. As a symbol of simplicity and wholeness, our visual language is derived from circles and simple geometry.

What you see here is too complex to be market facing but it does show the configurability that is built into our visual system. When using graphic elements in design, follow these guidelines:

- Keep things simple. Try not to use too many elements in a single composition.
- Circles may be used in wholes, halves, or quarters. They may be stacked vertically or horizontally. These shapes may also be used to mask photography.
- We predominantly use filled shapes, but outlined shapes are allowed to break up the density of color in layout.

Photography

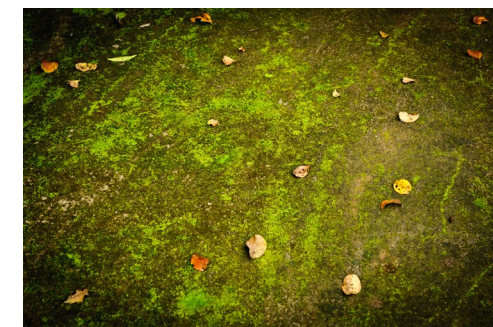

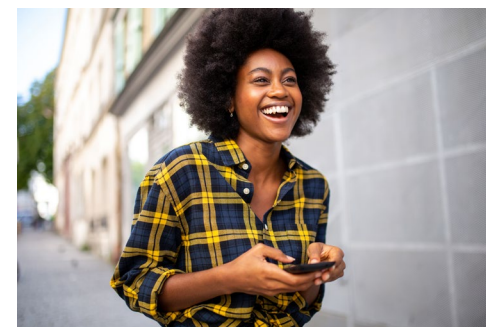

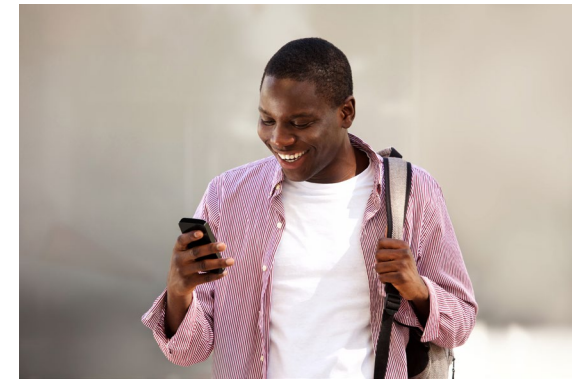

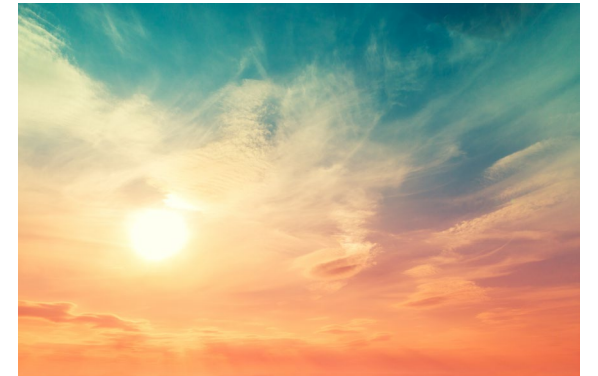

Through our portrait photography, we connect our brand to the people whose lives we make healthier. We reinforce our guardian perspective through our elemental photography.

Portrait Photography:

- People should appear to be outdoors. Lighting should feel natural and the person should be in focus.
- People should be looking left or up and to the left, unless they are engaging with technology.
- People should appear happy, engaged, and relaxed in overall posture.
- Make sure to capture diversity across photo selects within sales and marketing collateral. Avoid images where people are looking directly into the camera.

Elemental Photography:

- Look for interesting textures or patterns created by elements (solid, liquid, gas), such as water, sand, foliage, types of rocks, lava, fire, clouds, snow, ice, smoke, etc.
- Images should have colors that resemble colors found within our color palette.

Iconography

Our iconography is a thick outline style with forms rooted in simple geometry. Additionally, each icon features a small circle element, tying our iconography back to our graphic system.

Illustration

Our illustration style is vibrant and colorful. Our style can convey people, objects, or scenes.

When creating illustrations, follow these guidelines:

- People and objects should be anchored by a layered background element or scene. Layered elements should use angled or wavy edges, something that denotes movement.
- Use a monochromatic palette for layered elements or scenes. The people or objects should contrast and stand out from the layered backgrounds.
- Graphic elements like circles or drops can be used to mask the layered backgrounds. The primary person or object featured should overlap and extrude past the edge or edges of the shape used to contain the layered background.
- Make sure to capture diversity when using people illustrations. The Adobe skin tone swatch library is approved for use.
